TALI

by Bert Ardoin

A search for self-identity and self-expression led Tali, a native-born Israeli, to the brush and canvas at the early age of 10. Her journey began by studying art, history and creation in Tel Aviv and led her to New York, where she and her sister lived for several years. Later in Los Angeles, she studied privately for four years under an art teacher, who also was on the faculty at the Bezalel Academy of Art. Here under his guidance, Tali was inspired by colors, shapes, contrast, and imagery that expresses her inner soul and spirituality.

After nurturing and developing her talent in Los Angeles, where her work was featured in several gallery shows and purchased by many art savvy Hollywood hotshots, Tali relocated to Miami. "I have always dreamed of becoming a painter with all my heart and soul," she says. "While painting an abstract for a client, my own expressionism and surrealism emerged with 'Rothko esque' motifs. I realized then I had found my artistic home."

Tali's work combines impressionism, emotions, abstract idealism, and facets of her unique personality, a combination that makes it powerful, spiritual, and timeless. Her passion and soulful artistic expression acutalizes her innermost thoughts and beliefs, her dreams, heartaches, and happiness. Each art piece reflects her own life and her soul. "Its all about how you discover your inner being, how you connect to the light, making you a better person, so people can feel the spirit and spirituality of the paintings. The Brazilian carnival painting, pictured, she says, "expresses the inspiration of my childhood. Its warm colors show the love we had for each other at home. The Immigrants is about leaving home to a foreign land and emotions it brings."

This young artist speaks in a soft, endearing accent that seems to lie mysteriously somewhere between french and Hebrew. Her love affair with Miami is borne from its similarity to her native Israel, a warm, cultural, family-oriented people. Tali is like that and many other things that her art expresses.
